AutoCAD Crack Free For PC 2022

The ability to automate commands in AutoCAD with macros and add-ons. MACROS are regular expressions and conditional processing that perform or format text in AutoCAD. A macro can also perform automation actions such as change the current drawing, set the current layout view, and switch layouts. AutoLISP was originally the method for creating macro commands in AutoCAD, but now they can be created using other programming languages such as Visual LISP, VBA, and AutoLISP. MACROS can also be stored in a macro library for later use. Each macro has a name and a definition. A macro definition is a list of steps, containing regular expressions, conditional processing, and automation actions to perform or format text. The syntax of the macro definition is:

[macroName:] [sequence:[;]] [] [ Sequences are lists of: Regular expressions Conditional processing Automation actions The list of regular expressions is an ordered list of regular expressions. For example: [regEx 1] [regEx 2] [regEx 3] A sequence can contain a list of regular expressions, a list of conditional processing, or an ordered list of actions (usually ordered by when they should execute). For example: [cond 1] [cond 2] [cond 3] [cond 4] [regEx 1] [regEx 2] The list of conditional processing can be: [if 1] [if 2] [if 3] The list of actions can be: [doAction 1] [doAction 2] [doAction 3] Macro libraries can also be used to store macro files for later use. This enables the user to create or edit macros in a separate file from the main drawing. The macro library can either be in a.lmp (macro library) file (which is a text file), or in a.mac (macro) file (a binary file). The main features of macros are: It can handle multiple drawings It can be updated independently of the main drawing file It can handle custom forms It can read the current active drawing, making it independent of the active drawing 5b5f913d15
