Double click, boom you're all set! * The HWMonitor test is not available for the GTX 480, that's the only thing I can't get going on that card.

Yes, it works fine on my GTX 460 2GB under Windows 7 64bit. It even allows me to change some settings from within the

GUI. EDIT: And yes, I can also reproduce the driver problem. It happens almost all the time using my GTX 460. The driver is chosen to test 8.92.13, not the default one. By changing it to, say, 8.82 the problem is gone. Hey guys, how can I install this for an Intel HD 3000 on win7 professional 64-bit? I tried downloading it and in the portable folder it has CUDA-Z-1.0.exe. What do I do? Hi, The app is not optimised for Intel HD 3000 GPUs, so if you see a large performance gap compared to other cards you can be sure it's due to the driver. It is possible to disable this option in the main menu, however it can slow down performance, so be aware of that. At the moment it is possible to launch the app directly from the portable zip. I have just tested it with a Radeon HD 4650 and it works fine. It does download quite a lot of data to analyse. To do full justice to this program we need a flow chart, not an index of features 1) Is your GPU compatible with it? 2) Does your GPU have any problems with Linux and Mac users can install NVIDIA CUDA-5.2 or higher on their machines, while AMD users can use the official AMD APP SDK v1.1 or newer. Cancellation Session options: Cancel - closes the app Toggle - shows/hides all info and resources Close - closes the app. You can open it again from the Windows task tray/notification area or from the start menu. Settings: Show first-run dialog if not set as default Display device info if it fails to get information about your graphics card Support: Full support is possible. We hope to extend and enrich it further. You can also contact us via our ticket system. Thanks for your interest, our ticket system is now closed for the season, but you can contact us via the contact form at the bottom of this page. And after the callback is triggered, the callback is delayed to allow the asynchronous process to finish executing. This allows the remaining actions on the current thread to proceed before returning from the callback. Since we don't know how long the async process will take, there is a thread-lock to ensure that other threads trying to execute the callback cannot execute until the async operation is complete. Other threads with access to the event will block until they are notified via the callback that the operation is complete. Here is an example of a simple asynchronous callback that sends a message across the network using net.socket.
