WallpapersWaikato University says KiwiRail has declared a contract loss, and it will be impossible to spend more than $1.2 billion on the Pahiataua to Auckland electrification project. The report was released on Tuesday after four weeks of public hearings. The report has three main recommendations, and three more recommendations for procurement and contract management matters. "KiwiRail remain legally bound to deliver the full, 2016 financial obligations, including the MRC agreement and the construction contract," the report said. "It has been determined, despite all efforts to the contrary, that NZ Rail will not be able to fund the project. "NZ Rail is currently prohibited from spending more than $1.2b. The project cannot be approved under the existing guidelines, and will therefore need to be evaluated under a new set of guidelines." According to the report, the project needs to be restructured in a way that retains its funding to meet the full requirements of the contract. It also said the project was a severe financial risk, and KiwiRail was unable to do the project and meet its obligations. "The recommendation is that the full NZ Rail contract should be separated from the MRC contract and that NZ Rail should be released from its commitment. "The project is over-funded and has the potential to become insolvent. "The recommendation is that if NZ Rail is unable to meet its obligations, then NZ Rail should be compelled to bring a claim against the MRC." At the beginning of the year, $1.6 billion was set aside by KiwiRail to pay for the project. Since then, it has lost $1.2 billion. Cabinet will now discuss the recommendations, the report said. It said: "They include: The separation of the existing project from the MRC agreement. The provision of funding from NZ Rail that will cover the cost of [the] MRC contract and associated

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a class D amplifier and a class D amplifier having a pre-emphasis circuit which emphasizes a high frequency harmonic component of an output signal of the class D amplifier. 2. Description of the Related Art FIG. 5 illustrates a class D amplifier. The class D amplifier generates a video output signal from input binary digital signals S1 and S2 applied to the input terminal 1. The class D amplifier includes an input buffer 2, a class D power amplifier 3, and a low pass filter 4. The input buffer 2 receives the binary digital signals S1 and S2 to generate a drive signal S3 and a reference signal S4. The class D power amplifier 3 is driven by the drive signal S3 to generate an amplified output signal S5. The low pass filter 4 removes a high frequency harmonic component from the amplified output signal S5. The output signal S5 is outputted from the output terminal 1 via the low pass filter 4. In the class D amplifier, a low pass filter is needed in order to remove a high frequency harmonic component of an output signal of the class D amplifier. As illustrated in FIG. 5, the high frequency harmonic component is attenuated within a frequency range of approximately 20 MHz to 100 MHz, so the low pass filter 4 is needed within this frequency range. A conventional low pass filter is disclosed in, for example, Japanese Patent Application No. 63-291316. The conventional low pass filter comprises an input terminal 5, an output terminal 6, and a resistor network 7. The resistor network 7 is comprised of resistors R1-R4. The resistors R1 and R2 are connected in series, and the resistors R3 and R4 are connected in series. The input terminal 5 is connected between the resistors R1 and R2, and the output terminal 6 is connected between the resistors R3 and R4. An output signal S6 from the class D amplifier is inputted to the
