A field survey of Mycoplasma gallisepticum (MG) was carried out during the egg-laying and broiler periods in Queensland, Australia. MG was detected in 18.8% of broiler farms and 15.7% of flocks during the egg-laying period. One flock of 2700 broilers was culled during the primary broiler production period because of an outbreak of mycoplasmal polyserositis. MG was detected in the tonsils of all but one of 10 culled birds. All culled birds were serologically positive. Three outbreaks of respiratory mycoplasmosis occurred in successive broiler flocks on the same farm during the primary production period. The first flock was mild and contained mainly roosters; the second and third flocks were severe and affected both roosters and hens. MG was the sole pathogen detected by the study. All flocks were vaccinated with an inactivated vaccines. Breeding sites positive for MG were located in all of the areas surveyed. Differences in incidence of MG were found between farms from different regions of Queensland. Although MG was frequently detected in egg-laying farms, it was more often detected in broiler farms.W.
