Damage from the quake was relatively minor, with no major injuries reported. The quake also knocked down a billboard in nearby Fayetteville, W.Va. The quakes, which struck at a depth of 6 miles, lasted between several seconds and several minutes. "The quake started with a single tremor about six seconds long, and then another tremor about 3:00 minutes later." USGS seismologist Susan Hough wrote on a message board. "It was maybe six times more powerful than an average earthquake felt here." The quake, she said, was from the Richter 8 to 9 range. The shaking came about 1:20 p.m. during a heavy rain storm that had started earlier in the day and continued throughout the afternoon. An even-higher magnitude 6.7 earthquake struck near Piqua, Ohio, but its epicenter was estimated at a depth of 3.5 miles. The quakes may have been caused by the East-West Fault, which is estimated to extend south from Piqua to the northern end of the Shawnee Hills, a large fault complex that extends from Fayetteville to Fayettefield, 570a42141b
