Tracking The Sources Of Carbon Emissions Despite the media barrage of doom and gloom about climate change, greenhouse gas emissions actually fell over the last few years. Global emissions of CO2 from fossil fuels and industry fell by about 6.3 percent from 2009 to 2010, while total global emissions were flat. That is the latest data available from the UN's International Energy Agency, as the IEA is preparing its 2011 International Energy Outlook. The IEA's forecast for total global greenhouse gas emissions is a nearly 17 percent rise in 2011 and 17 percent growth in 2012 to 13.8 billion tons of CO2. But, as the IEA has noted, to meet the Paris climate change agreement goals, emissions will need to fall by about 10 percent each year between 2020 and 2050. The IEA analysis noted that, in the past year, coal exports from China rose by 22 percent. It also noted that, even though China's greenhouse gas emissions have been decreasing, its reliance on coal will continue to increase, with a 1.4 billion ton increase in coal imports by 2025. Even as the International Energy Agency continues to hail this 6.3 percent decline in global emissions, it is worth remembering that the IEA's own data show that global greenhouse gas emissions are going up.

Q: Continuity in the Mean Value Theorem I have been reading quite a lot about the Mean Value Theorem and it strikes me as odd that it should be continuous. Since the theorem says that if  $f(a)=f(b)$  then  $f'(x)=f'(c)$  where  $c$  lies between  $a$  and  $b$  then shouldn't  $f(x)$  have to be continuous everywhere or am I missing something here? A: The problem is in your definition of continuity: A function  $f(x)$  is continuous at  $x=a$  if and only if for every  $\epsilon>0$  there exists

"Thousands of years of progress have already been destroyed in my life," Aneua writes in a statement on her blog. "But what is it that the next generation must fight? And why me?" AD AD Aneua's maternal family are Amis, a distinct and sometimes persecuted ethnic group in Somalia that originated in Ethiopia. They were Muslims in a mainly Christian nation and Aneua grew up in a nominally Christian part of Mogadishu. She writes that she knows there's little chance of her being killed by the government, but that it's a real fear. "My big fear is the fear of the next generation," Aneua writes. "That it will not be possible for me to stand up for them." "I am just a woman," Aneua's Facebook friends are responding with similar stories. "Many of us were left as orphans because of civil war. We had to become self-reliant because of bad living conditions," writes Esqetess Ramadhan. "Many people of our community face discrimination and discrimination is the main reason." "We are weak," Adnan Khalifa tells a friend. "Many people don't believe in us, they don't believe in a Muslim woman, let alone a Somali woman." Some have said the criticisms Aneua has faced are
