No registration required but registration is required for the future version release. The "0 days" mean that you don't have to register for a full month after purchase as registration is required. (I just bought it yesterday) go to the link below to check out where to get your image editor unregistered. I think the above link will work for you. There is no cost, and after registration they will send you a email containing the code when they are ready for you to test it out. Worst case scenario they send you a full registration key by post. I'm not sure what the procedure is for that. Corel.com Customer Support Forums. The Site. Home. Customer. Support. Help. Corel.com. Corel.com. Retrieved July 24, 2011 A: Are they a type of licence? If so, how do they work? I don't have it installed, so I can't answer that part. I do know that you need a valid activation key to use it. The only way you can give someone your valid key is if they purchased it from you, but that still won't give them a valid license because only you are entitled to a valid key. However, you can give them your valid serial number and they can activate it manually. I am familiar with PhotoImpact and Corel PaintShop Pro. PhotoImpact has the same kind of activation scheme. If you are just looking for an activation key, either the one you already have or another. If you have already activated it, then there is very little anyone can do to stop you, even if they discover your licence is invalid. You can only really be 'banned' if you're using the software maliciously and that doesn't happen very often. If you want a valid licence, you need to buy one. The proper way to get a valid licence is to purchase it from a distributor - a company that is not connected with Corel. The way your distributor works is that you give them your serial number and they give you the licence. They then need to send it to Corel and Corel will send you your activation code. You can also contact Corel and get the code for
