A: While I don't doubt the completeness of the tool, I'd have to ask what exactly it's supposed to do. Here's the 2.4 help: CRUCC 2.4 - Car Radio Universal Code Calculator, supports . It supports radio code retrieval with radio models a.k.a.: "Vehicle Radio" "Radio" "Car Radio" and serial numbers a.k.a.: "Vehicle Registration Number" "Serial Number" "Car Registration Number" Here is a smaller version of the help text: The help text actually doesn't make it clear what "serial number" is, and it isn't clear what a "car registration number" is. If "serial number" is similar to the vehicle's model serial number (and not the vehicle's VIN) then this is likely to help, but if you already know the serial number you're after, you don't need this. Is "car registration number" like a vehicle's license plate number? If that's the case, then I think this could be useful, but I'll need to read up on what a license plate number is. I think it's useful for retrieving the stereo's coding, or its VIN so that it can be put back into the vehicle, but that may be wrong. If "car registration number" is similar to the vehicle's VIN, then this is useful. If "car registration number" is something else, then this is probably worthless. The ability to calculate the code seems to imply it is able to read back from the stereo into a standard PC without requiring an "online" connection. The ability to update the code seems to imply the updater is accessible via the internet, or at least by someone that has access to the internet, or by a cable connected to the vehicle. I don't really see any functionality to decrypt your car radio's signals, but I've not had a ton of experience with this sort of thing, so I might be missing something. UPDATE: I've worked out the differences between "serial number" and "vehicle registration number". It seems to me that "car registration number" is a standard license plate number, and "serial number" is something like the "vehicle's VIN". I'm calling this answer "yes" for "Serial Number" (which is what the help text appears to

He pulled over into a parking lot, and as I walked towards the passenger side of the vehicle, I noticed that as I approached, he keyed his lock a few times and very aggressively jiggled the DOOR lock knob (which moved the door latch on and off several times). I had to mention his name, but in due time. I could say it. It was just right to say it. I could get away with it. I had seen him, so I could be sure that he knew I had seen him. I didn't know what to say. " Hey," I said. Then I remembered I was supposed to. I had to say, " how ya' doin'. " " Hi, " he said, barely audible. " I don't have time for this. " He made as if to back away. I waved, and said, " Sorry to bother you. " Then I said something that I had been meaning to say for a while, " which is the truth. " " Thank you. " he said, as if he might even hug me. " I hate hearing about people dying, but it just makes me happy to know there are people out there who care. " I wasn't sure how to respond. This is hard. "Did you hear about that girl?" he asked, excited. " She was murdered on her way home from school. " I nodded. " There were three women with her. " " Three girls? " I asked. " Another mother and her two children were asleep in the next apartment over. " He paused. " Well, and the one girl died of her head wounds. " Then he paused. " No. I mean, she died of a head wound, but they found her in pieces. " He had my attention. " And they found the third girl in the apartment next door. " He paused again. " She was mutilated and missing her ear. " I gasped, but I don't think he noticed. " I should go." " Ok. " " OK. " I said. " Take care. " He stood up, and turned to go back to the driver's seat. He stumbled, and I 570a42141b
