Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a filter that can be used in an image forming apparatus such as a printer or a copying machine, and more particularly to a filter capable of removing any dust that attaches to the surface of a photoconductor drum. 2. Discussion of the Background Image forming apparatus such as a printer, a copying machine, and a facsimile machine that are used in offices have a variety of parts that are used in image formation. These parts are generally comprised of metal parts, and, specifically in the case of the image forming apparatus, particularly in the case of a printer, from the viewpoint of its service life, durability, and reliability, are often comprised of metal parts that are coated with a hard resin. The photoconductor drum, the photosensitive drum, is a part that is used for an image forming apparatus that outputs a toner image, such as an image forming apparatus. A photoconductor drum is a part on which a surface is formed by coating a photosensitive body that is a cylindrical metal body with a coat that is comprised of zinc oxide, titanyl phosplate, or a similar substance. A photoconductor drum is commonly formed into a cylindrical shape, and is adapted to rotate. In an image forming apparatus, the life of the photoconductor drum is relatively short, and therefore for this reason, the surface of the photoconductor drum is generally coated with a hard resin that is comprised of a thermosetting resin such as epoxy resin, a thermoplastic resin such as acryl or ABS resin, or a cross-linking type resin such as melamine resin. If dust attaches to a cylindrical body that is in the form of a sleeve, even if it is minute, when the surface of the sleeve is coated with a hard resin, the dust that attaches to the surface of the sleeve will become an inclusion that mars the surface of the sleeve, and when the surface is
