2. Application Targets to be Protected The security goals for any application will determine which hardware or software functionality should be protected and which should not. Each target installation requires a deployed information security system.

Chapter 2.1 shows various examples of application targets that protect personal information systems and businesses.

Application security requirements for personal users are defined as a set of application information security rules, procedures and policies that a user applies when working with this application. The main elements of a target security setup include: - identification of the user and the source of his data - this allows you to exclude the possibility of unauthorized access to data stored on the device; - device identification - protects the device from unauthorized use; Goals and limits Who is the data source for the target application?

Information systems of personal and corporate users should have the same goals and limitations. The typical structure of an information security system for a personal user is presented in Table. 2.4. The main categories of personal users can use various devices (for example, laptop, computer, smartphone) to work with the application: - Persons who have a physical mailbox or Skype account.

These are the most important users for whom the application is designed to provide access to the Internet or access to e-mail sites, e-mail, etc. For example, a Dropbox store owner may have installed this application to support e-commerce.

Among target user groups: - Personnel for whom a physical e-mail box or password is set in the electronic payment system; - Supervisors and other professionals who are interested in security issues and have the right to know about them. - Private users who themselves can set and adjust rights, data protection, restrict access to data, etc.; - Information system makers
