Ubuntu does not include transparent scrollbars. As such, if you want to use Ubuntu as a desktop OS, it is best to keep the scrollbars hidden. However, there are some very special cases where you might wish to show scrollbars. I've been using this for a while, so I thought I'd make a little guide on how to do it. Step 1. Create a hidden scrollbar Firstly, we need to tell Ubuntu that the windows that have scrollbars should be hidden. To do this, open the System Settings and go to the Accessibility menu. From there you can set 'Always show scrollbars and always show frame for windows' to 'Never'. This will make Ubuntu hide all the scrollbars and frames, even if you're not using a touchpad. Make sure you've selected 'Never', otherwise your scrolling behaviour will be stuck at the max. Step 2. Create a custom scrollbar OK, so now we have a completely hidden scrollbar, which is cool, but we want to make it look nicer. As such, you're going to make a custom scrollbar. For this, we will just need a scrollbar image (it doesn't matter which one). I usually use an empty scrollbar which is just the standard scrollbar shape with a white bar for the background. Simply make a new image file with the name you want to give it, and then open it up in GIMP (or any other image editor). In GIMP, we want to apply a new pattern, so click on the Patterns menu, and then click on 'New'. This will open a dialog box with a huge list of patterns to choose from. Just scroll down to 'Pattern', and then select 'Gradient'. For the Gradient, we want to put the scrollbar on a transparent background with a white gradient. To do this, right-click on the scrollbar and chose 'Fill', then 'Gradient'. In the Gradient box, make sure 'Color' is set to white. Then uncheck the 'Linear' box, and then set 'Angle' to either 0, 45 or 135 degrees. If you do have a customized scrollbar

Bertie Albert Ernest Anthony Beresford, Duke of Tewkesbury, styled as The Earl of March and known as Bertie, is a fictional character in the television drama Downton Abbey and the first film adaptation of the first three seasons of the show. Downton Abbey Background The Earl of March is the eldest son of Lord Grantham. His mother is Lady Cora Crawley, Countess of Grantham, the first cousin once removed of his father, and his father's second cousin twice removed by marriage, formerly Lady Gertrude Maud Trafford, Countess of Grantham. The Earl of March is good friends with Lady Mary, who he tells her that he is secretly in love with, and is engaged to Lady Edith Crawley, who he hopes to marry once she marries his best friend, Matthew Crawley. However, in the series' first episode, The Crawleys, Bertie falls in love with Miss Marigold Gibson, his daughter's governess, but she refuses to marry him. During the first two seasons, Bertie is mostly absent from the show except for a few episodes where he is at the manor for the wedding of Lady Gertrude, who is Lord Grantham's first cousin, and is allowed to be there by her father, due to a falling-out with her mother. He also spends holidays with his mother in England. Bertie and Mary are already engaged in 1919 when Downton Abbey is still open, but the wedding does not take place when Bertie is in London, since his friend Lord Goring is in a military jail for killing a member of the terrorist group the Black Hand. Mary's father, the Earl of Grantham, is incensed, and the Earl insists that Mary will either marry Bertie or elope with Goring. She is resolute in refusing both options, and informs Bertie that she is pregnant with Goring's child. She also informs him that she loves Goring and would marry him in spite of the scandal. Goring agrees to tell his mother that she is pregnant with his baby, and though Lord Grantham is disgusted, he lets her and Goring leave after a tearful reconciliation. Bertie's whereabouts after that are unknown, but he is living in London and travels back to Downton Abbey when Cora Crawley, Lady Grantham, dies
