Combining Video and Editing Video is a great way to teach, and like text, it lends itself to both screen and print. In fact, video can work with both text and images, although the range of picture formats for video (like still photos) is limited, compared with the range for images. Video editing is the process of combining images or audio files to make your message more cohesive. Like editing photos, you can combine images to make a compelling story. Understanding video editing In video editing, you must understand several aspects of the process: The video you create must be shot and edited in one go. Don't shoot, edit, and then shoot again. The end result will be choppy and incomplete. Editing a video is a series of steps that produces a final file. Just as you can't edit and print a single image, you can't edit a video from one step to another. Instead, you must first import it into the application where you want to work, then cut it, and finally export it to another format. The following list breaks down the editing process for you: Importing the video into your computer: You import a video file into an editing application just like you import photos or graphics into Photoshop or another graphics editing program. (Chapter 6 provides a detailed description.) Cuts: You cut the video clips you need to include in the project from the original, and then you move them to the appropriate spot in your timeline. (See the "Putting the Timeline to Work" section later in this chapter for details.) Trimming: After you insert a video clip into your timeline, you can add more material, such as text or images, to the project. You can trim that material by cutting it. (See "Understanding trimming" in this chapter.) Exporting the video to another format: After you're finished editing the video, you often want to send it to someone else to watch or publish. (See the "Exporting your video" section later in this chapter.) Getting an Overview For most video editors, working in digital video means working in a timeline, or collection of clips. Each of these sections (or cuts) represents the story of the video, just as a photo would show a series of images.

Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are powerful and complex programs that are certainly worth the learning curve. And they're very worth it. But there are cheaper, easier ways to edit images and add text and other effects. There are many different software options for editing photos, including FotoMagico, Digital Ice, Microsoft Paint, Paint.NET, Microsoft Expression Studio, Vectric's Onshape, and even Apple's iPhoto. But not every one of them can edit a RAW file. There are many different software options for editing photos, including FotoMagico, Digital Ice, Microsoft Paint, Paint.NET, Microsoft Expression Studio, Vectric's Onshape, and even Apple's iPhoto. But not every one of them can edit a RAW file. If you don't want to pay for Photoshop or Photoshop Elements, you can always use GIMP. These open-source tools are free and can be downloaded and installed for Windows, Mac, Linux, Android, iOS, etc. As with any software, however, there are some drawbacks. Compared to Photoshop, GIMP is much slower and doesn't have some of the advanced features. Because it's open source, you can study and tinker with it, but that doesn't make it a good option for those who want more professional results. But what if you do have Photoshop and Photoshop Elements on your machine? Should you just use the software they came with? There are specific cases when switching to an alternative could help. Here's a quick list of reasons to try out a free alternative, or a more powerful Photoshop. By Default, Camera Raw Won't Open RAW Files RAW files are like blank canvasses, which means that you can add any kind of post processing you want to them. But when the RAW file goes directly from the camera, it often has some auto-corrections that cause the image to look different when opened in Photoshop or Elements. Even if you shoot in raw mode and use the Adobe Camera Raw, both programs can still make adjustments to the white balance, exposure, and other settings. But the results are not always the same: Although Photoshop and Photoshop Elements can be super powerful, they can sometimes make problematic or slightly inaccurate adjustments to photos. Camera Raw is an essential tool for every photographer, and it's 05a79cecff

Q: How do i make a full screen activity In android activitys, when we launch the activity in phone's screen, we design the activity with dialog or something else that fit in phone's size but when the activity needs to be fullscreen, we launch the activity in different size for different resolutions A: You can use Fullscreen dialog or View : Dialog Intent intent = new Intent(YourActivity.this, MainActivity.class); YourActivity.this.startActivity(intent); View getWindow().requestFeature(Window.FEATURE_NO_TITLE); getWindow().setFlags(WindowManager.LayoutParams.FLAG_FULLSCREEN, WindowManager.LayoutParams.FLAG_FULLSCREEN); You can add other flags like use fullscreen mode, etc. Source: Android View Android: How to make an activity full screen? In the aftermath of a successful 13-9 win over Colorado State, there is no escaping talk about the quality of play on the Mountain West Conference football field. On this Friday morning, CBS Sports is running a contest: Win an all-access trip to the conference championship game, including hotel accommodations for the winner, airfare from anywhere in the country, practice time with the Mountain West's first-string offense and defense, and perhaps a profile story in the conference championship game week magazine. Watch and enter the contest here. In the early going Friday, it looked like either CSU or UNLV would have a chance to upset Boise State. But thanks to some clutch plays by the Broncos, and a late-game call by CSU head coach Jim McElwain that went against the Rams, Colorado State won, and a college football history may be made: In the final minute of their first home game at the University of Colorado, Colorado State University almost lost the game in a play that was a microcosm of the rest of the game. On third-and-goal from the goal line, CSU's Duron Carter threw toward the end zone and ran to the goal line before failing to make it. The ball bounced out of his hands, and without a chance at a touchdown, coach Jim McElwain called a time-out with 22 seconds left.
