Venezuela crisis: Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaido says he won't step down Published duration 26 January 2019 Related Topics Venezuela crisis image copyright Reuters image caption Mr Guaido says he is acting on behalf of President Maduro Venezuela's opposition leader Juan Guaido says he will not resign as president, despite a call by the opposition-controlled National Assembly for him to do so. Mr Guaido told Venezuelans that he was acting on behalf of President Nicolas Maduro, who has urged people to "not allow" him to be overthrown. Meanwhile, the US has said the country is going through a "crisis of law and order". Venezuelan authorities say their investigation into the fatal shooting of a protester has found that the crime was premeditated. On Monday, the security minister of Tachira state, Lladimer Salazar, told a press conference the alleged attacker, an off-duty police officer, had been identified and was being brought to justice. He said the officer had participated in the protest on 19 January, when Leopoldo Lopez - a leading member of the opposition party Popular Will - was shot in the head. media caption How Venezuela's unrest led to an avalanche of protest in Latin America 'Not recognised' Mr Guaido, who has led a parallel government in Caracas since declaring himself interim president on 23 January, has been a leading voice in the opposition to President Maduro. He has called for Mr Maduro's resignation and the holding of free elections, as well as the release of politicians and opposition activists jailed by the Maduro administration. However, Mr Maduro, who is backed by Venezuela's armed forces, has warned that Mr Guaido's efforts are in violation of Venezuelan law. In an address on Wednesday, Mr Maduro called on "every Venezuelan, of whatever race, creed or social origin, to reject this coup". He said Mr Guaido's actions "are not legal, nor are they constitutional", and said the National Assembly did not have the power to make such a call. Mr Maduro also accused the US of "criminalising Venezuelans" by carrying out economic sanctions on his country. The US state department has said it is "carefully monitoring" the situation in Venezuela. It called on Mr Maduro's administration to "step aside and allow for democratic elections to restore democracy and end the ongoing crisis". 'Defying
