Sugar Cube describes the experience of becoming the first player of an unscripted and improvisational narrative. You are in charge of a mismatched crew of sugar cubes and you have to navigate the oceans of Cioko. If you control your crew well enough, your goal is to get your crew to an island guarded by a powerful adversary. The crew usually has to fight its way to the island. On the way, you encounter other crew and sometimes someone who tries to capture you or your crew to obtain the precious sugar cube you carry with you. Sometimes your crew will be boarded by your enemies and will have to escape while fighting them or rush to the mainland. You have to make the right decisions for your crew and your survival. That's it! Both sides will have to play the board. Therefore, it is important for each crew to play correctly, they have to set the order in which they attack and what abilities they have. But don't worry, for each crew it is very easy to set their orders as you start with a crew card and can assign whatever attack to any cube. What can be achieved in a fight between a crew? 1) In most encounters, the battle will often consist of one to three rounds. Sometimes the battle will be extended. On the average, it may take up to around 10 seconds to complete one round. The encounter will last as long as there are crews and matches. 2) Each crew can have a specific goal in a battle. And you can achieve this by assigning values to your cubes. This is important to know, because you will need to balance them between their combat abilities and their goals. 3) Each crew is determined by two stats. They are the speed and the strength. You can access these stats and view their overview before the fight by asking your crew to cast their anchor near a building. 4) Each round consists of four matches. You have to choose whether you want to attack first, defence, take the headshot or let the enemy attack you. After you press one of these four buttons, your cubes will attack each other. The battle commences with the attack button on the crew that you want to attack first. This crew will now fight against the crew that you targeted. After you are done with the current fight, you can attack another crew or let them go. 5) When you have selected three crews to fight against each other, the battle will begin. On the average, each round will consist of 10 to 15 fights c9d1549cdd

. Like the idea of the wood hitting pins, a great way to get out that frustration and make sure that it isn't just you (yeah, I've done that with other sports too. You're a smart archer you'll remember to think it and cancel it). Kind of like watching the Astrodomes of baseball (or even football): build it and they will come. A lot of fun. Am thinking I need to go to the Houston archery trade show to see how this was made. As good as the launch pad. having the targets above the out doors is neat. Agree that the design needs a few tweaks to be as pure as possible. That last photo of the back of the barn makes it REALLY clear that, as is, the game could be a LOT more fun if the targets were just removed. Sure you will still hear the clatter of the bow on the pins, but the spectator will never see anything as the barn will block the view. Having the targets so high and from a non-standard position just makes it easier for you to oah them and get that infuriating nick you make on the back of the head. My game of choice is Sevens because I have to do it at the old Veterans Home and it's so poosible to cheat as no one else is around to notice if you are cheating. Just start and aim down at an angle, then move back into a vertical position. I'm using a Markellee Explorer synthetic bow at the moment. I'm still on the short draw, but soon will shoot the full draw. It leaves the shoulder just a bit too relaxed. Nice bow though. You can see it here; I built it to replace my M-18. Yeah, I knew somebody up north would like that one. I just got back to work as a DBA, so I haven't had a lot of time to pursue my archery hobby. I went on one of those M18 search sites (I could be slightly obsessive). The Explorer is the full length version of the M18, with the advantage of the full range of draw lengths. Does 6 lb draw weight sound right, or is that too high of a draw weight? Yes, I know the range of draw weights, but you can't get out much till about 24 lb. That's a cool game. Yes, I knew somebody
