I first started making this game in the summer of 2002. The game was not very good at the time. If I had an iPhone I could show you a picture of it. The basic premise behind the game was that a certain number of different grid sizes were created. The player would rotate the pieces around the grids until they had a square shape with the appropriate amount of blocks facing up. Once this square was found, the player could click on it, and the game would start. At this point, the user had to have the right amount of good blocks, and the correct amount of bad blocks. Once this was achieved, the game would proceed to count down from five at a time, and the user could move pieces around the board by clicking on them. Once a row of pieces was destroyed, it would be counted as a row destroyed and so forth. The game was designed to accommodate different users. Some people were used to Pac-Man, and liked to play it that way. Others have never played a game with a box shape before. For someone like that, the game might be a little too challenging. I also have a rule in the game that when a row is destroyed, the next five rows may be destroyed at once. This allows someone to score more points than the usual amount. The standard amount of turns is 5. My parents used to play the game, and this rule was put in place to make the game easier for them. The game has 4 different grids to choose from, fall, winter, spring, and summer. I never made it to summer. I think I was just plain done making it. This means that there is only 1 summer grid so far. This version of the game is kind of a new version of the game. Rather than 4 grids, the player has to choose one of the 4 grids, with the following: Fall, Winter, Spring, or Summer. Every 5 turns a new grid is randomly selected to the next grid to play in. The player should enjoy this game as much as I did creating it. :) A: Re: the first screenshot It's shows a game called The Game (German: Spiel). It's not a game that has ever been played, but the designer had the idea that you might be able to play it in your web browser. Maybe he or she was

Pick 2 animals from a giant list, and the game will use an algorithm to morph them together! Each hybrid has its own unique stats and perks, and you test them against your friends in a natural-selection kind of way. There are millions of possibilities. Includes 7 game-modes, plus a bunch of challenge maps, but I will be adding content whenever I can (hence, Early Access). You can add your own creatures, from whatever movie or game you can think of, and try morphing them with other animals! It supports that. Comes with online multiplayer & creature-editor & experimental mode. ]]> 27 Jun 2017 10:44:00 -0400Chibipete4443 Introducing Soriati 2!
