To determine oxygen transport to the fetus during the third trimester, we estimated the oxygen content of the umbilical vein with reference to the venous oxygen content of the mother and, using the product: QF ratio, calculated the amount of oxygen transported to the fetus. An average of 5.1 liters of oxygen per minute was transported to the fetus during labor and only 1.9 liters was transported during cesarean section.Efficacy of oral misoprostol in the treatment of first-trimester pregnancy loss. To study the efficacy of oral misoprostol in the treatment of early pregnancy loss. A prospectively randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled trial was performed to evaluate the efficacy of misoprostol in the treatment of first-trimester pregnancy loss. One hundred forty-eight women with first-trimester pregnancy loss were enrolled. The effect of misoprostol on pregnancy loss was calculated as the difference in the number of miscarriages and ectopic pregnancies between the misoprostol and placebo groups. The Kaplan-Meier method was used to calculate the efficacy of misoprostol. The Kaplan-Meier estimates were corrected to confound with gestational age. The initial follow-up was 4 weeks. If pregnancy continued, the next follow-up was 8 weeks and then every 2 weeks until 20 weeks of gestation. Clinical pregnancies occurred in 33 of 74 (44.5%) women in the misoprostol group and in 14 of 74 (19.2%) in the placebo group. Differences between the two groups were significant at the 4-week follow-up (P = .003), but differences were not significant at the 8-week follow-up. The estimate of efficacy, adjusted to the gestational age, was higher in the misoprostol group (27/74, 36.5%) than in the placebo group (7/74, 9.5%) (P

Background The dengue vector Aedes aegypti is widespread in Senegal [1, 2, 4], a country endemic for dengue [3]. Dengue has become one of the most important arboviruses in Africa due to the lack of systematic vector control [2]. Its impact is proportional to the density of A. aegypti [2]. Previous studies showed that rural and urban locations are both important habitats for A. aegypti in Senegal [1, 2]. However, the seasonal variations and the specific role of different habitats on the spatial distributions of A. aegypti within urban and rural areas are not known yet. In the current study, Ae. aegypti adults were collected between June and November 2009 in the Membres, Thies and Pikine regions. To understand better the role of specific habitats on the spatial distribution of Ae. aegypti, ovitraps were installed near the water collections and the aquatic vegetation was tested for the presence of Ae. aegypti larvae. Adult Ae. aegypti were collected using a light trap and light-traps [2]. A total of 744 females and 257 males were collected during the study period. They were analysed with respect to their sites of collection (urban and rural) and their birth places (primary and secondary habitats). Latitude, longitude and altitude were measured with a GPS. Habitat for ovitraps and larval sampling Ovitrap were installed along the major rivers, on floating plants, in terrestrial flower plantations, in paddy fields and around large water collections (ponds and large tanks) [1, 5]. Floating plants consist of water hyacinth, water lily
