Dariolius [Latest]

Dariolius is a program that lets you split files according to different criteria. You have full control of how you wish to split the files. It can be used as a good alternative to splitters that do not allow your personal preferences to be applied. It lets you split files according to any combination of 4 criteria: The size of each part, which you set using the size parameter. The last part may be smaller. Number of parts: Splits the file into the specified number of parts, each of equal size. The last part may be slightly smaller. Transfer each part in: Splits the file such that each part can be transferred at the specified speed within the specified time. Files are split into parts of equal size, except for the last part, which may be smaller. Amount of time allowed for transfer (time parameter): Splits the file such that each part can be transferred at the specified time (the time parameter). The last part may be smaller. You can split many files at once. Just set them all up, and split. Dariolius is designed to run unattended, so you can go away and come back later to check the results. Choose between using a batch or program file to merge your split parts. Batch files take less space for smaller jobs. Useful for advanced users. Program files are more powerful and interactive. They also take less space for larger jobs. Dariolius has built in email support, so you can easily send large files to a friend from within the program. NOTE: Free for private and personal use only. Dariolius Requirements: Windows 95/98/ME/NT/2000 2000 Server Dariolius Setup.
