A mysterious puzzle game – Comic Bladerunner 3: The Revenant’s Boots – has just been released. You are the lead composer. So I'm trying the following: cleartool rm cleartool cat vob/path/to/file fileid:whatever On the last command, I get the error: cleartool: Error performing operation: Permission denied I have checked out, the permissions are set correctly, the file is version controlled and the directory is set correctly. There doesn't seem to be a solution in the wiki, but maybe someone knows what to do here. A: This is not a cleartool command, but a Unix-based command. The CLEARCASE_HOME environment variable is deprecated and you need to use the cleartool client instead. See this question to learn how to fix your ClearCase installation (and this one to learn how to connect to ClearCase from a shell script): is there a good way to connect to ClearCase with cleartool on a UNIX based system? How do I connect to ClearCase using shell scripting? If you want to use Unix tools, you could also use the -U option to the rm command (rm -U for a user-specific removal, rm -U for a group-specific removal, etc. depending on the configuration of your versioning server). A: I have to agree with the comments about CRS, but there is no problem as long as you are the only user with the ability to remove the version

Eaten Alive HENRY FORD II. ( Henry Ford II, son of Henry Ford, never forgave his brother Edsel of their father's success. Their rift became known as the “Ford family feud.”) FARMINGDALE, N.Y. - Jan. 2, 1943. A young woman of nine unable to use her legs. Her toes had been eaten away by the hungry nipissongs of a tropical rainforest. The nipissongs, that big-nosed laughing group of carnivorous megafauna, is the name given to all the big cats of the west coast of South America. Man's description for this animal first appeared in the early seventeenth century, and that was more than a hundred years before White settlers unknowingly gave the animal its name. Today we might call the nipissong the big cat of the Pacific Ocean. For like all big cats it walks upright, but unlike the likes of the Asiatic leopard or the tiger, it leaves no tracks to call him by. The nipissong prefers the water, and most dwell in the rocky coves and moist thickets in which the clouds drip—and nipissongs frequent these coastal places. Nipissongs are indeed a different species of bear, but maybe it is the American black bear that takes the most delight in their company, for in many ways the nipissong is like a bear, a big round muscle mass of ferocity and bloodthirstiness. And what about the domestic cat? The big-cat resemblance of the nipissong often causes talk of nipissongs possessing intelligence. A nipissong, a human being with no legs at the mid-thigh whose toes or lower tarsals have been eaten away by the nipissongs, awaits to be rescued by author Walter Sobchak in San Francisco Harbor. August 2007. A young woman—in fact Walter Sobchak's daughter—struck by a major illness is taken to a hospital in New York City. Doctors pronounce her dead. But, she lives. Lying in her hospital bed, through tubes and wires, she awakens, sits up—then stands up, walks around until she finds the sunlight streaming in through a window where she sees a piece of plywood with a white cat on it. That cat paw. Seems the doctors were right. Doctors
