The thrombin inhibitors T-anistoyl succinate (TAS) and N alpha-tosyl-L-arginine methyl ester (TAME), reduce the promotion by thrombin on fibroblast collagen synthesis; while the anticoagulant heparin markedly potentiates the fibroblast stimulation. The addition of high concentrations of fibrinogen or T-Phe-Phe into the thrombin in the dose of 0.1 unit/ml completely eliminates the above stimulating effect. Thrombin induces an increase of the fibroblast [35S]sulphate incorporation into acid-insoluble proteins. However, incubation of these cells with high concentrations of TAS or TAME eliminates this effect. The fibroblasts treated with heparin in the dose of 10 units/ml exhibit a considerable increase of the thymidine incorporation rate into DNA, as a result of the restoration of the basal state. These observations indicate the differences in the mechanisms of the thrombin action on fibroblasts and epitheloid cells.Q: Using projection to implement a tap gesture on a map I'm using the Google MapView, and I'm trying to figure out how to implement a tap gesture recognizer on the map.
