If you have any questions, do not hesitate to contact us at Q: Why does SpecFlow give me a "Could not start an instance of executable because a user-specific configuration file does not exist"? I am trying to run a SpecFlow test on my machine (rather than running it on the server) using Visual Studio 2013. Basically, I have one feature file that looks like: Feature: As a user I want to change my password So that my login credentials are safe And I have an "integration test" like: Scenario: I want to change my password Given I am logged in When I go to the Password tab Then the new password is displayed And the new password is set However, when I start the test, I get this error: Cannot find 'My App Name.exe.config' for this user. Please ensure that it exists in the correct location and any required environment variables are correctly configured. Note that it does find my AppName.exe, but it should be finding the "configuration" file (i.e. the "My App Name.exe.config"), not just the executable. (I realize this was the default behaviour in earlier versions of SpecFlow, but I've been working off of the newer version, which has that functionality.) What I've tried: There are no exceptions from the When I go to the Password tab that mention anything about a configuration file, but this should be a red-flag. I've tried moving my app folder up a directory and adding it to my system path, like so: C:\Windows\System32\Path.exe;%SystemRoot%\Microsoft.NET\Framework\v4.0.30319;%windir%\sysnative And it didn't work.

Posted on 2016-03-16T13:54:55+00:00 As of this moment(2/3/2016) fans on PC were given no official information of a Playstation 4 port of Halo 5. This would be huge considering Uncharted 4 sold about 1.6 million on the PS3 and the game was expected to get ported after the 1.1 million goal was reached in September. With the new Microsoft E3 and the announcement of Halo Infinite it would only make sense. A Microsoft spokesperson that we have verified with confirms that they are working on such a port, and that the platform will be revealed at a later time. This has us wondering about the 1.4MM goal for the 360 version. Could we see a port of it as well? Only time will tell! A high-performance hybrid porous phase-stable cobalt-molybdenum co-metal-oxide-selective electrodes based on a covalent functionalised graphene layer. A graphene sheet-like core material of metal oxide with continuous porosity and large accessible surface areas was utilized for the determination of Co(II) and Mo(VI) ions. The surface of the present graphene core was modified with diazonium salt of chloranil and cyclohexanediamine groups on the functionalised graphene for stabilisation and selectivity towards the Co(II) and Mo(VI) ions, and then a porous layer was formed on the surface of graphene. It was also proved that covalent functionalisation and the formation of porous layer were two key factors in enhancing the selectivity of the obtained graphene-based electrodes. The developed electrodes achieved new values for linear dynamic range (LDR) and detection limit (DL), and the optimized proposed electrode showed attractive selectivity towards the Co(II) and Mo(VI) ions in acidic solutions as well as in aqueous media. available free, we offer time and cost-effective expert services to our clients.
