Rates of hemoglobin regeneration were studied in anemic mice, fed a folate-free sucrose-fructose water diet. In the folate-free sucrose-fructose group, hemoglobin (Hb) values were the same in nontreated (control) and folate-deficient mice, 1 and 2 wk after being fed the folate-free sucrose-fructose water diet. In contrast, the folate-deficient mice fed folate-free regular water showed a significantly lower rate of hemoglobin regeneration than did the controls. This reduction could be explained by increasing gastrointestinal folate extraction in the folate-free sucrose-fructose water, leading to greater polyglutamylation of the stored hemoglobin in the reticuloendothelial cells, and the greater galactosylation of folate-free Hb released from the cells due to enhanced methylation of the chain terminus on tetrahydrofolate. UNPUBLISHED UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT No. 09-7977 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
