"With the introduction of HyperMotion Technology for FIFA 22, we are making a clear first step into the world of next generation football simulation," said Peter Moore, Executive Producer. "I am proud to be able to bring fans a game filled with gameplay details that players have been dreaming of for a very long time." The new play style for next generation FIFA is based on what players do on the pitch. "HyperMotion Technology" helps players accomplish tasks that would have been very difficult to achieve in real life, but in a completely immersive way. Using the data captured from the motion capture suits and motion capture devices, the physics engine calculates all player movements in three-dimensions, including not only the horizontal direction, but also vertical and diagonal motion. Until now, motion capture technology has captured simple motions, like jumping, running and kicking. HyperMotion Technology is powered by real-life player data that lets players do all kinds of more complex actions. The on-screen interaction is precise and realistic. It captures the player's movements, tackles, aerial duels and ball contact. As a result, players can actually perform all kinds of complex and dynamic actions, such as toe-pokes, backheels and all kinds of one-touch passes. The motion capture data is then used to power a game engine that calculates player reactions, direction, position, speed, acceleration and more. Cutting-Edge Technology New ground-breaking technology and groundbreaking game play are the keys to the future of sports simulations, and in this game FIFA 22 fans will be able to enjoy everything they have been missing out on in the past. The player movement has been evaluated and adjusted based on the real-life player data. Thanks to the collection of data and the thorough evaluation of the data, all players will be able to make finer and more precise movements in all parts of the pitch. Players can use the ball more realistically and can even make lung-busting, knee-knocking tackles using their real-life movements and size. Every game is absolutely authentic - you have to be there to experience all the fun. Everything will feel as if you are really playing a match. The match will feel fast-paced, authentic and is played on the brand new THE METRO pitch from the game's venue, the Allianz Arena. The pitch is 16 meters longer and four meters wider than the Allianz Arena pitch. It also
