What's new in Orc Assault:

Thing A trucker's journal of life, food and the road October 08, 2005 White Lines Roulette Yesterday morning I finally made my way out to Dillsville to pick up the tractor. It was about an hour's drive and I arrived at Andy's, the dealer I purchased it from, with plenty of time to spare. The shop opened at 10 and I had a shot at getting in early. Although I was nervous, I kept that emotion from showing as I walked in. I'd never been to this dealership before and was worried I'd be caught by Andy, the owner, in some little wining and dining situation. I didn't think like that though, and I wasn't apprehensive about what I might find. The first time I visited the place, Andy's son, Mark walked me around, introducing me to new pieces of equipment, most of which were too big or expensive for me to handle. This time, I was more familiar with the staff, and there was no need for introductions. A familiar face from the office greeted me as I walked in the door and gave me a big welcome. Although I'd already been in the office, he greeted me and put me at ease right from the start. He showed me around the huge bay where I had been purchasing the tractor last summer and explained the history of the tractor. I was asked how I'd liked the tractor I'd purchased just a month before and also asked for my suggestions on what I'd like to see improved with the new tractor. I barely know what happened after that, but I remember not being uncomfortable at all. Most of the men in the office had treated me with a similar kindness and it was obvious from the atmosphere in the room that this place cared about their customers. Every person who met me that day seemed to respect me and wanted to make me comfortable. I want to thank Andy and his staff for treating me so well. It has made the whole purchase process so much easier. I'd have to clarify that what I'm referring to when I mention Andy, and his staff, is the "ease" of the whole process of buying the tractor. I am quite familiar with the process, as I've already done two auctions, in this area, for two of my own vehicles. Still, the process is the same, but the people who are involved seem to make the whole thing easier. They do their homework, not only about what equipment is available, but

Nuclear submarines are evolving through the development of new weapons, new technologies, and are moving to the forefront of the military and civilian sphere. The list of orders passed by the State can reach into hundreds or thousands of vessels, each to solve a different mission. A new weapon that can be fitted to any ship is the problem that requires consideration. "Tornado" project developers are working on the basis of the latest designs of submarines, aiming at the development of new weapons to solve different problems. UMC ships "Tornado" of the rank of 16 are intended for the deep sea missions. This is the first class of weapons on the new project, with a large number of points. While developing combat power, the project "Tornado" is considered to be a prototype of a new class of submarines in the future. Submarine is an established object that has been proven before, but this time the developers will try to do everything right. The assault on the enemy will be a kind of surprise attack, especially on the enemy, who will consider a ship as one who follows orders with the aid of a remote control. To accomplish this, the ship "Tornado" should be equipped with enough range. It can be equipped with one of the following weapons: - Inertia neutron fragmentation warheads "Chiron" - Inertia neutron fragmentation warheads "Omega" - Inertia neutron fragmentation warheads "Pegasus" - A fully autonomous cannon "Aphrodite" - Incendiary shells "Scavenger" The development team of UMC is already working on a new project - "Tornado". This project will upgrade your ship into a long-range combat ship.Q: Executing a Cython script with a given command line I have written a Cython script and it works fine. I just need to execute it from the command line. A Python script provides the command line arguments which would use to execute the Cython script. Is there anyway to pass the command line arguments to the Cython script? This Cython script acts as a wrapper for a bash script which is later on used to monitor a server. Hence, I need to execute the Cython script from the command line. A: If your script is print "foo" and you have the following python (
