When I load the view, this partial is loaded perfectly on the page. However, when I create a modal and load the page using jquery, the partialview is just ignored. Any ideas why this would be the case? [Edit] I have created a working version of what I'm trying to accomplish A: It looks like you're using jQuery to display the modal and then loading the main view via ajax. This causes the partial to be rendered before the modal has been loaded and the controller action that renders the partial view has not been called. If you have full access to the server I would recommend passing in some state into the modal view and then using an ajax call to render the partial view in the success callback of the modal's form submit. Q: Deleted files on file explorer still on system - Windows 10 My company's file server is backing up its files to a USB drive. If I delete a file on the server's file explorer I can see it on the USB drive and also in the recycle bin but it's not actually deleted. Also, if I navigate to this drive on the file explorer in Windows 10, I can still see the files and they're still being backed up. How do I actually delete these files? Is this something that the file server is doing or does Windows have some kind of automatic backup (which I wouldn't know how to check)? A: The file server is probably backing up the deleted files to local storage. Then when you unplug the USB drive, the server is still backing up those files. You need to either delete the files from the USB drive manually or un
