An unexpected journey, is a story of a romance between the player and the protagonist. The protagonist walks through the paths and rooms of the night forest in the dark, but what is in the darkness is not completely clear. She remembered her childhood in the dark, but all she has in mind is that someone is looking for her. Can the player solve the mystery of this night? The internet is a wonderful tool. They can connect people from all over the world, and they can support each other, too. And one company is taking that one step further and offering their users discounts on every transaction. Ebates takes information from retailers who want to give their customers a discount and uses that information to match you with the retailers. Ebates is free, and you can earn as much as 20% cash back in your PayPal. That's usually in the form of gift cards, which you can either pick up at the store, or download onto your phone. Who isn't curious about how much it would be worth to have a professional do a tune-up on their home computer? Well, thanks to a new app from BPhotoVideo, you can do just that and get an estimate. In your smartphone's browser, you'll be able to plug in your computer's Ethernet cable and have an estimate for that tune-up sent to you right on your phone. With this Netflix, Apple, and Amazon prime day sale event happening, you can get a bunch of popular titles on streaming services for a lower cost. There are so many TV shows and movies on Netflix to catch up on, such as The Man In the High Castle, Westworld, Stranger Things, Ozark, and so many more. For the price of $5.99, you can stream a ton of TV shows and movies and this sale is definitely one that you will want to check out. Wish we got more days off in life? You may be out of luck. But what about the rest of the year? One app out there is promising to give you every single free public holiday in the UK. Before you head out into the world, make sure you check out your local paper, as every UK town and city has a free local paper, and there are usually many more free regional papers. While it may be a bonus to have this extra free time on your hands, you never know when you could be using this time to do something extra-special with your family

Looking beyond our little pond: a multi-disciplinary process to increase the number of mental health services available in Wales. Recent evidence from systematic reviews of the evidence has indicated that economic, political and service prioritization activities within the National Health Service have had a severe effect on increasing the number of individuals with a mental health problem accessing mental health services in the United Kingdom. In order to raise the profile of mental health services in the United Kingdom and develop strategies to increase access to services, this paper describes how mental health services in Wales have been used to develop a pro-active approach to service development. The paper identifies barriers and opportunities in service development and existing services, and suggests ways to overcome these, providing a list of six identified barriers and five identified opportunities. The paper concludes that it is essential that service-users, carers and care-givers, clinicians and commissioners provide a holistic view of services. In order to achieve this understanding, multi-disciplinary service teams and collaboration across the National Health Service are key. We discuss how this has been achieved in Wales.

Q: Is There A Way To Add Arbitrary Number of Nodes To A Graph Without Copying The Nodes? I'm using libclojure to compute the distance between two "nodes" or "vectors" (Lists). Lets say I have a vector a = [1, 3, 4, 5]. And I have a vector b = [2, 6, 7]. Is it possible to store both vectors in c9d1549cdd

What's new:

Attack Noids is a Flash-based group made up of three American cartoonists (Jesse Pearson, Derek Fridolfske and Andrew Weismann). The group has created many parody videos of popular movies and television series for both television, video games and web. The group was founded and is mostly based in Baltimore, Maryland. The third member, Weismann, is a part-time dancer, singer-songwriter, occasionally spoken-word poet, and regular contributor to various humor magazines and humor websites. As a single, he often is credited by another member of the group, "Trunks and Leatherpants", an alias provided by Pearson, who first contacted Weismann after seeing his art at the Baltimore Chickpea Festival. Pearson credits Weismann and the other two members with providing a writing style that keeps attention even when the jokes are strong enough to be considered "potty" humor. Though their humor is biting and irreverent, it is largely tongue-in-cheek, and they have produced a number of parodies of popular media. Over the course of their history, Attack Noids have created numerous TV shorts for Cartoon Network and Adult Swim with sites including televisionhype.net, networkboth.com and engaget.com. They frequently make video games parodies on YouTube and have parodied brands like Activision and Transformer on the Comic Sans website. Attack Noids have performed live at the 2003 Image Expo, where they met Digital Underground, and at the image-countdown night at the 2004 Evangelion Expo, where they met GODZILLA:CAGE -MONSTERS FROM HELL. Television Attack Noids have been continuously featured on Cartoon Network's Adult Swim since 2003. The group has made multiple appearances in their created short The Ballad of the Funny Bastards series; specifically Single White Female and Unit 91. The Mad Gunman (although uncredited, it was officially announced as Attack Noids under "Trunks and Leatherpants", their "tribute video" of the Naked Gun film series) as well as Super Movie Lake chugs a large glass of milk. In Halloween cartoons, they often join SyFy channel's Thursday Night Mystery. Attack Noids have parodied several cartoons and sitcoms on television. These include: Attack No.1 (Animated series) Attack No.1 (Black Rhino in Japanese) Attack No.1: The

A simple combination of hands and eyes can help robots do complex tasks that previous robot systems are unable to achieve, according to a new robot collaboration system developed by Carnegie Mellon University researchers. The new system, combining the use of robotic arms, a remote display and two Leap Motion controllers, allows a user to make or undo movements, turn on or off obstacles and even turn the robot's camera or light on or off. It also can manipulate objects in the environment, such as enclosing the objects in the hands of the robot arm or in the hands and eyes of the user. Until now, this kind of robot has had limited movement and control. "This work is yet another step toward making a robot perform complicated tasks," said Jaime Carballo, an assistant professor of computer science at Carnegie Mellon. "Some tasks are even more difficult because the robot has to perform them while performing the task is already complicated." The researchers tested their new method on a device they call the Joystick Follower robot: The robot can follow a
