Since the hormone growth hormone (GH) stimulates the growth of many tissues, the major function of the liver is to synthesize and secrete large quantities of this hormone into the circulation. Although not as readily available as the portal blood, GH may also be locally synthesized and stored in the liver. Several candidate GH-dependent growth factors have been proposed to stimulate growth by a direct action on target cells. A small peptide, somatomedin, is secreted by the liver and is known to act in the kidney and in some target tissues to stimulate growth. A nonproteinaceous factor, pre-heparin-growth-factor (PHGF), has been isolated from extracts of normal rat liver, and its partial characterization indicates that it may also be a growth-stimulating factor in liver. Human liver also appears to secrete a mitogenic factor for cultured fibroblasts. Whether this factor is a small peptide or a nonproteinaceous glycoprotein, and its function in liver are currently under investigation.Tuesday, April 26, 2017 The U.S. Supreme Court says it will hear arguments about the constitutionality of religious objections to homosexuality in Obergefell v. Hodges. This decision was prompted by the U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals decision that the federal government cannot recognize same-sex marriages. Such a ruling would invalidate both marriages and the subsequent adoption of children by same-sex couples. Obergefell v. What's new:

UNTOWER The NEW State of Texas Coaching License became effective July 1, 2012 The newest update to the recent Equestrian Coaching in Texas law is now on the Internet: The update is the same revision given to the Texas Board of Veterinary Medical Examiners (formerly known as the Texas Board of Professional Land Sports Veterinarians) on April 24. Although the 2012 revision is not of concern to most horse owners and trainers, it will definitely be of concern to the reporters. The major change here is that the horse owners and trainers do not have to provide medical documentation stating the horse has the "type" of physical "condition" that allows it to participate in equestrian competition. What this means is that trainers, no longer have to have their horses veterinary examination by a "veterinarian only" to participate in equestrian competition. In other words, trainers no longer need to call all veterinarians, equine practitioners, or Texas A&M University veterinary school students and get them to sign the "questionnaire" stating that the horse has the correct physical condition to compete or the trainer doesn't train the horse for "competition". It was previously unnecessary for a trainer to get a written letter with an opinion from a veterinarian indicating that the horse has the correct medical condition, or have the veterinarian sign a form to say the horse has that condition, that has been in existence since 1982. The new regulation states that the trainer may document that, under his or her supervision, the horse was examined and the trainer determined that the horse is "acceptable" by, I'm under the impression that this change has arisen due to increased awareness of Eastern and Western Dressage's using their horses as both competitors and performing horses. Stephanie Franzke of the British Institute of Horsemanship points out the following: One thing I like about Dr. Baker’s last column is that there has been no more mention of what horse an entry is in and in fact no horse needs be imported at all. Only 50 per cent of the entries in a dressage competition need to be “from this country” and if you are at the level of simply coming to compete and the horse comes from your country the only requirement is for the entrant to be able to “assure” you that they can “assure” you that the horse is of suitable/suitable/suitably
