Wondershare Filmora Scrn 2.0.1 Incl Patch Full (All-in-One) Video Editor. The high-resolution, three-dimensional structure of a ribosomal RNA fragment. A rRNA fragment was isolated from a highly conserved region of the 27 S ribosomal subunit that contains the A-site and P-site tRNA binding sites. This fragment was structurally refined from a single crystal of a complex containing the fragment and two crystallization buffer components. The final model has an R factor of 0.169 for reflections between 7 and 3.3 angstroms. The structure consists of a noncovalent complex between ribosomal RNA and the 2'-OH of deacylated tRNA. The A- and P-sites are buried inside the molecule, and the A-site is composed of two noncovalent interactions with high-resolution RNA hydrogen-bond networks: (i) a bidentate hydrogen bond to the G44-U45 step and (ii) a covalent 3' to 5' bond to the C45-G46 step. The P-site interactions are with the conserved G1876-G1877 and U2300-U2302 steps. The binding site for the modified nucleoside 3'-methylcytidine has been modeled into the P-site, and the guanine at this position is accepted through the 2'-OH of a deacylated tRNA. Ribosomal RNA directly participates in catalysis for the formation of pyrimidine-pyrimidine cross-links with tRNA. However, to date, direct evidence that RNA takes part in catalysis of these pyrimidine-pyrimidine cross-links has been missing. This would suggest that when RNA catalyzes the cross-linking of deacylated tRNA, it adopts the reactive conformation not seen in the 30 S subunit crystal structure.

This is particularly important because it suggests that a catalytic RNA may not have to adopt the reactive conformation in the context of the ribosome.
