**Advanced Color Management: Working with Color Corrections and Toning** In addition to the choices that you have in choosing colors for your images, you may need to correct them as well.

You may have changed the lighting or exposure setting in your camera; or perhaps you changed a color balance setting in your camera. In many cases, you may want to correct a color cast.

Fortunately, the various

color-correction options allow you to correct a range of issues, including colors and lighting, exposure, and color balance. ##

**Color Cast** _Color cast_ is a term to describe the combination of red, green, or blue in a

specific color that seems to be wrong. The most common problem in color cast is the greenish tone (including green, yellow-green, and amber) that is a result of exposure or subject matter. The color of a dark subject looks light in a poorly exposed image because the dark tones are more cyan, and if you then brighten the image, all the color components are now too pinky-purple and the skin looks greenish. One way to correct this is to add exposure compensation to the image. This can be done manually in the Bracket tab, or the Levels dialog box.

---

Most cameras with an exposure mode allow you to bracket a series of images, or otherwise change the exposure, and then combine them to create an image with the desired exposure. In any case, in the **Bracket** tab, you can remove color casts in a couple of ways: •

---

The **White Balance** controls allow you to make adjustments to the white point. • The **Presets** tab allows you to use one of the professional presets for

---

color correction. In addition to correcting colors, these presets also work on Exposure, Contrast, and Sharpness. The third way to remove color cast is in the
