Edit: 23/09/10: The old version 0.3.4 or 5.0.3 is not compatible with CS5 and CS4 and can no longer be installed on these new versions of Photoshop. Use the latest version of Photoshop, the one in the link below, for a more stable and functional application. What is Photoshop? Photoshop is a raster image editor, which operates by creating a single layer for each item being created. The objects are represented by a grid of pixels. It is therefore possible to edit multiple objects on a single layer, and remove (or add, or modify) certain pixels, or portions of these pixels, without affecting the surrounding pixels. Its primary use is to create and edit photographs. These days the typical users of the program are "advertising creatives," graphic designers, and web designers, who use it to create and edit web graphics. However, it's also a relatively versatile package that can be used for many other purposes, such as creating logos, and even manipulation of scanned images of CDs or books, and can also be used for printing photographs. Photoshop's tools are based on layers, and nearly all these tools can be applied to one or more layers at once. This allows for the combining of objects so that more than one image, each a separate object, can be created and edited at the same time. As a raster image editor, it was created specifically for creating raster images, and it is often employed in that capacity. In addition, it provides the user with some options to create vector based files. However, this functionality is not the foundation of Photoshop, and it's not used extensively in this program. What is a layered file format? When layers are used, you can have them be transparent. This means that when you look at the file, you see the background layer behind the foreground layer, with some of the foreground layer visible. This means that if you have more than one layer, you can modify them and alter their effects until you are happy with the result. Users with prior experience with layered files will tell you that this is the only real method of editing. It isn't just the view on a computer screen, but rather the file format itself. When a photo is changed, it is saved in the form of the layered file format (there are different extensions that enable this to be done). Some information is copied to a new

Why you should be worried about climate change as a student. So in an effort to be better prepared for the global conference on climate change meeting in Paris next year, I did a series of "Why are you worried about climate change as a student?" These questions come from the work I am doing as part of the Global Resilience Collective, a group of students in Singapore who want to help build a better world and a more resilient future. One of our first steps in this process has been to examine why climate change is important to us and why it is important to our generation and to our future generations. So, here are five reasons why climate change is important to every student: 1. Climate change is a humanitarian crisis. We, as young people, have no idea of the challenges that our generation will face because of climate change. Moreover, the populations that will be most affected by climate change are usually those that are least responsible for their suffering. 2. Climate change will lead to health issues. The health of people, especially children, will suffer greatly because of the health challenges that climate change will bring. 3. Climate change will lead to food insecurity. Climate change will make it impossible for food to be produced sustainably. Less land and water will be available for food production. Moreover, the greenhouse gas emissions that cause climate change can also result in the loss of land, water, and other resources that will be used to produce food. 4. Climate change will lead to disruptions. By definition, climate change is a process that is dynamic and there will be long term changes that need to be taken into account. For example, if we do not stop deforestation today, it can impact our ability to survive and live a good life tomorrow. 5. Climate change will lead to loss of lives and property. The effects of climate change will include loss of lives and damage to property, plants, and ecosystems. So, why should you care about climate change as a student? Because it is a humanitarian crisis that you can help solve. Because climate change is a physical and ecological problem that you are going to experience in your own life. Because climate change is a social problem that you can help solve. Because climate change is a problem that impacts all of us, and we should all do what we can to help solve it. So, go and read more about climate change and share this site with
