Nuclear imaging technology is increasingly used to produce images based on the distribution of physiologically active substances in various parts of the human body. One of the most prevalent applications of nuclear imaging technology is to examine the distribution of a tracer in the body, such as a radioactive drug, by using a positron emission tomography (PET) device. PET technology is currently being used to evaluate the functional status and physiology of various parts of the body. Although PET technology has also been applied to a variety of other medical fields, its primary application is for diagnosing diseases. The basic principles of PET involve placing the patient inside the tomograph, injecting a radiopharmaceutical into the patient, and then measuring the radiation emanating from the body after the radiation

HN: How would you manage your finances as a startup if you were given a $100M? - drm237 My finance background is a bit rusty but i was wondering if anyone had any advice for me as I start a new job and get paid a salary of $100M starting this week. How would you manage it? I should note that I don't have any other income sources besides my salary so I cant just "bank" the $100M like a hacker, no... I have bills to pay. ===== yaks_hairbrush

Purchasing power is what counts. Essentially, you'd spend it as you used it. The big questions are: are you saving for a house? Is your big dream is to save a little for retirement? How much of your salary do you hope to make investment income each year? Where do you buy your clothes from? Do you need mechanical or electronic equipment? What kind of car do you drive? The answers to these will influence your financial planning strategy. ----- paulsb The thing is that with that $100M you
