To develop a predictive model for identifying patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) in primary care. We studied 150 consecutive patients with SLE seen in 4 primary care offices, using the following: SLE criteria adapted from the American College of Rheumatology (ACR) classification criteria, 3 groups of patient characteristics used to identify potential risk factors for lupus in primary care, and a prospective risk model based on the presence of selected features in all but 1 patient (n = 148). A prediction model for identifying patients with SLE in primary care was developed and validated with data from 35 SLE patients seen in a different primary care office. This model was assessed in terms of sensitivity, specificity, and area under the receiver-operating characteristic (ROC) curve. The univariate analysis identified age ≥ 50 years or older, disease activity, serologic test results, and the presence of joint pain, fever, and cytopenias as potential risk factors for SLE. An ROC curve analysis demonstrated a ROC curve of 0.89. A logistic regression model including significant risk factors only explained 3% of the variability in lupus (R²). A similar model including all potential risk factors explained only 3% (P = 0.006) of the variability. A final model that included all significant risk factors (ROC curve of 0.83) explained 50% (R² = 0.50) of the variability in SLE. The sensitivity, specificity, and area under the ROC curve of the model were 95%, 93%, and 0.84, respectively. Our model demonstrated satisfactory sensitivity and specificity for identifying patients with SLE in primary care, and validated well in a different population of patients. A prediction model of lupus can be used as an educational tool for patients who present with lupus-like symptoms to identify patients with SLE in primary care. I am trying to figure out which process exactly is causing a problem. I could attach strace to the process. Is there any other way to find the process? A: There's tons of tools for debug, from strace, gdb, at, etc. Most of them are extremely useful, but the major downside is they can only debug after the fact, and you lose the opportunity to "fix" the issue. There's also dumpcap, which provides a good way to record and replay a process's transactions, but does not interact well with most actual debugging tools. A: There are a variety of methods, but they all come down to the exact same thing: you need to attach a debugger to the process. Some examples: gdb - this is probably the most comfortable, since it's usually integrated into your system. It's known to be very powerful for a variety of reasons, but it's not "set and forget" either, and it needs to be set up ahead of time. strace - it's similar to gdb, except that it's designed to be used from within strace. You're a bit more limited with it, but it can be really powerful since you can view every syscall that the process is doing. It too is "set and 1cdb36666d

Samples, as well as young and adult rats, were collected at 32, 72 and 120h, to evaluate the appearance of AMPs in the skin. For whole skin homogenate, 0.5g of sample was homogenised in 3 ml of 50% isopropanol/H~2~O for 5 min and centrifuged at 12,000 g for 15 min at 4°C. Supernatants were collected and stored at -80°C. To quantify AMP levels, total protein was determined using the DC™ Protein Assay (BioRad Laboratories, GmbH, Munich, Germany). TNF-α and IL-1β were quantified from the skin homogenate as previously described.^[@bib61]^ Lysozyme and KC levels were measured in individual skin homogenates according to the manufacturer's instructions (R&D Systems, Minneapolis, MN, USA). The levels of C5a and LTB~4~ were measured using commercially available enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) kits (BioSource, Camarillo, CA, USA).
