Capture the Moment Photography requires the planning and knowledge to pose the right kind of shot with all the tools and talent to execute the shot effectively. But even the best photographer sometimes just has a brilliant moment that grabs the attention of her eye and her camera. This moment is the basis of the image. It is the perfect composition of subject and shadow, or the perfect expression of light or emotion. There are as many ways to capture the moment as there are photographers. The more experience the photographer gains, the more options open up to her. The most important thing to remember when capturing a moment is to do something with that moment. By doing something, you are communicating to the viewer that he or she shouldn't just sit back and watch — he or she should step forward, grab the moment, and take a look. ## Explore the Tools Photoshop is a powerful program and comes packed with tools to inspire and express your creativity. This chapter is a tutorial on how to become a creative photographer with Photoshop, using photography of real people and real situations. Here's a rundown of the tools you need to capture a good photo of any real person: * A camera and a monitor that allows you to see what your camera is seeing * A tripod * A bag with a memory card * A tripod mount (optional) * An expensive camera (optional) * A good eye (optional) ## Capture the Moment: Identifying Your Subject Capturing a snapshot of a person is not an easy thing to do. This is because there are millions of shots of people on the web and a million ways to pose the person. A good photographer looks at the person's face and looks for features like eyes, nose, and mouth that could make a perfect photograph. She then looks at the person's body language and overall body shape to find the feature that will naturally make the body look to be in

Beta-blocking drugs inhibit the enzymatic activity of a novel prolidase homolog on rat kidney brush border membranes. We previously isolated and characterized a novel mammalian enzyme that catalyzes the specific hydrolysis of dipeptides containing proline at the COOH terminus. Substrate specificity studies with a series of dipeptides containing proline and hydrolysis of dipeptides by the purified enzyme confirmed that proline-terminating dipeptides were hydrolyzed by the enzyme, although the enzyme was unable to hydrolyze a gamma-glutamyl peptide containing proline or peptides containing alanine at the amino terminus or the proline residue. When compared with other dipeptidases, the enzyme exhibited some differences in substrate specificity. However, with all substrates, the  $K_i$  for dipeptides was about 1000-fold less than that for glutathione. The enzyme also could hydrolyze peptides of higher molecular weight. The optimal pH of hydrolysis of peptide substrates (but not dipeptides) was 9-10; however, in contrast to many dipeptidases, proline-terminating dipeptides were not hydrolyzed by the enzyme at pH 5. Therefore, this enzyme, which we named prolidase, appears to be an enzyme distinct from known dipeptidases. In the present study, we determined whether beta-blocking drugs would inhibit the enzymatic activity of prolidase. beta-Blockers were chosen for this study since they have been shown to markedly inhibit the formation of active renin on the surface of the renal proximal tubule brush border. The effects of three beta-blocking drugs, propranolol, metoprolol, and atenolol, were examined at concentrations of 1-100 microM on prolidase activity in rat kidney proximal tubule brush border membranes. All three drugs inhibited prolidase with IC50s ranging from approximately 60 microM to 1 microM. The selectivity of the drugs was confirmed by their inability to inhibit other enzymes present in renal tubule brush border membranes, i.e., alanine aminopeptidase, gamma-glutamyltransferase, and alkaline phosphatase. Moreover, there was no difference in potency for the three drugs tested, as well as the inhibitory properties of other beta-blocking drugs. Our results suggest that the inhibitory

A brief history of pharmacotherapy of bipolar disorder. Bipolar disorder (BD) is the result of complex interactions between inherited, acquired, and environmental factors. Despite intensive efforts, current treatments for BD have minimal efficacy and are burdened with side effects. In the past, the pharmacotherapy of BD was quite imprecise, with treatments switching between antipsychotics, antidepressants, and/or lithium with variable results. This chapter traces the evolution of pharmacotherapy of BD from antipsychotics and antidepressant to antimanic agents, and touches briefly on the history of other medications, namely electroconvulsive therapy and lithium. The use of typical antipsychotics has been supplanted by atypical antipsychotics, which have fewer extrapyramidal side effects and metabolic consequences. As a result, atypical antipsychotics are often used as first-line treatments. The use of mood stabilizers (antiepileptics) has had a major impact on the development of modern pharmacotherapy of BD. Because they maintain euthymic states and prevent mood lability, the mood stabilizers are useful in maintaining patients' functional status and improving their quality of life. Pharmacotherapy for BD consists of the combination of mood stabilizers and antipsychotics, antidepressants, and antimanic medications. Although progress has been made in the development of newer pharmacotherapy for BD, the treatment of BD still remains unsatisfactory. Baloch are majority in Sindh province of Pakistan and mostly inhabit in Balochistan province of Pakistan. Millions of Pakistani immigrants have settled in the subcontinent South India, mostly in the states of Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. Marriages between Pakistani men and Indian women are at high levels. The Pakistan Army has provided the weapons to Indian Security forces to battle the insurgents in India. Pakistani fighters are involved in the separatist insurgency in India's Kashmir region. Pakistan has succeeded in providing its opposition leaders in India with communication equipment. The recent attack in Mumbai, India in which the militants used the communication apparatus provided by Pakistan, strongly reflects the government's support for the cross border attacks that are directed against India. Terrorist attacks within Pakistan have almost stopped in the last two years, which is a testament to the government's restraint. Kashmir and Balochistan are major centers of separatist movements in Pakistan. Pakistan has been perceived as a terrorist country. Such perception was created as a result of the
