Keratoplasty is a valuable tool in medicine, but occasionally results in a penetrating keratoplasty rejection reaction. Preserved human corneal tissue is more useful in this procedure than cadaveric corneal tissue, but the current methods of preservation are not successful in maintaining cell viability. The purpose of this study was to determine whether histidine and glutamate could be used as additives to common preservation solutions to prolong cell viability and reduce rejection. A human corneal epithelial cell line and human corneal tissue were preserved in Optisol GS and stored for 5 days at 37 degrees C. Optisol GS media with histidine or glutamate were prepared, and cell viability was compared to controls without additives. Cell viability was determined at 1, 3, and 5 days after preservation. Mitochondrial function was evaluated by determining the effects of various compounds on mitochondrial function at 1 and 5 days after preservation. Intracellular ATP levels were measured at 5 days after preservation. Rat corneal tissue was preserved in Optisol GS, stored for 24 h at 20 degrees C, and was transplanted into rabbit corneas. Five days after transplantation, histology was compared in recipients of preserved tissue and corneas transplanted immediately. Viability of human corneal cells was significantly improved by

I was hoping to post something romantic, I really was. But the emotional roller coaster I've been on throughout these last few weeks keeps me in bits of a high. No matter the way we look at things, it's a heartbroken, I've hurt someone's feelings. I've let someone down, made a bad choice in who I opened up to. I could go into a lot more detail, the list could be endless. I'm not really good at putting things in perspective, I get horribly depressed when I try to understand why. I'm not by nature a depressed person, but I can't see that day to day at work for a while. Luckily I have many friends who have been fabulous and have encouraged me, who have been invaluable. All I will say is that I am heartbroken. In part because I don't think I deserve to be hurt like this. Yes, I've worked hard. Yes, I've done good. But something's still just not right with me, something's wrong somewhere. Those who know me, know that I am strong, but that doesn't mean I cope easily and I'm finding that to be an incredibly hard thing to deal with. I feel so weak, and I don't get angry that I feel this way. But I do. I find myself taking it out on people, I feel so consumed by it. I feel so small, as though the problems aren't even mine. I'm literally pulling myself down and I'm tired. I'm feeling incredibly guilty, and sad because of how I feel. I know my good things outweigh the e79caf774b
