I have a nodejs app which needs to run in an environment with a process.env.NODE_ENV = 'production' so that I can run it on a redhat machine as a service. It seems that this is the proper way to do this: [Unit] Description=My Node.js App Documentation= Wants=network-online.target After=network-online.target [Service] Type=simple ExecStart=/usr/bin/nodejs /path/to/app/index.js ExecStop=/usr/bin/nodejs -e production /path/to/app/index.js Restart=always RestartSec=1 [Install] WantedBy=multi-user.target I am having a bit of trouble figuring out the correct way to shutdown the service for good. My understanding is that the starting of the app stops the service, and this is ok if the app gets killed by a SIGTERM, however the service itself is still running. The service is also not able to stop itself. There's a separate service which serves as my supervisor, and which has a different interface for stopping the service (sudo service my-service stop). I have tried a couple of things, with no success sudo service my-app-service stop to stop the service as suggested here sending a SIGKILL to the service (via sudo kill -9 pid) Is there a simple way to shutdown the service correctly? What's new in Alien Breed 3: Descent:

Review by TheMadPoet17 on August 1, 2010 The Silk Rose Murders (1873 edition) is the second book in the famous series of detective novels written by Amelia B. Edwards. Though these are not mysteries as we understand the term nowadays, they are definitely a text on the subject of "private detection" and are often hailed as the first successful entry of that genre in English literature. Since the genre is so rarely mentioned, I strongly recommend anyone who wants to learn more about this important social force in Victorian London read this book. Personally, I find that I re-read this book quite often now that I am reading a lot of Victorian ladies. My post today is only about the books, however. So here is the plot of The Silk Rose Murders, which I can only lightly paraphrase because I cannot speak Persian. In reality, the story is more complex. At the beginning of the story, Margaret is in the house of her employer, Mrs. Ibbetson (who, to the surprise of the reader, is a woman!), when she makes a sudden discovery. Oh, and what a discovery it is - the murder of Margaret's former husband, the poet Louis Papineau, has been committed. Mrs. Ibbetson rushes to the house to report the murder to the police, and finds a young man waiting in her bedroom. This man who was anxious to find out what was happening at the house, is young Louis Papineau, now grown up and the tenth son of Lord Braithwaite. The 10th son is in line to inherit his father's title, his brother will not. This is a plot of M. Forster's wonderful episode, The Almighty Judge. While literary gossiping about the hierarchy of the English peerage, they are basically thinking about the solutions of crimes - literally, solving them. Once he has found out the details of what happened, Mr. Papineau becomes a superb detective. He assumes that if his wife has not outright lied, the missing evidence would be in some books in her father's library. Mrs. Papineau asks Mr. Ibbetson to help her and takes him to her father's library. Mr. Papineau finds all these books in Ancient Persian and Arabic, so he asks Mr. Ibbetson to locate them so he can translate. Mr. Ibbetson takes him to College

The Law of the Jungle is the first expansion of Grand Strategy/Sid Meier's Ace of Aces! The Last War Game of the first decade of mankind's interstellar exploration finally ended in 1061, after more than 500 years of human warfare. Permanently divided into the five largest nations, mankind began to spread out into the stars. Starting in the early days of mankind, exploration was driven by the need to survive, the quest to find habitable planets being limited by technological and economic means. Space was accessible, but at a price. With the spread of the worlds came different kinds of human settlements. The rich and powerful settled on the best-protected planets, but most civilisations still lived on the knife-edge between survival and extinction. Conquest was commonplace as the small kingdoms of the world fought each other and the larger nations for land, glory and resources. The race for supremacy continued, with a few nations now peaking at the top of the spectrum of civilisation. Catastrophe struck unexpectedly in 1061, when a lingering cold snap tipped the climate of the Earth into a nuclear winter. The melting icecaps led to a catastrophic, worldwide flood which wiped out hundreds of millions of inhabitants. The wave of disasters which struck the six surviving nations was unprecedented in history. The human race faced annihilation. However, a minority of the survivors, believing that their fate was divinely ordained and had been set out by a higher power, turned to a new religion of benign science. Science became the guiding light of humanity, and the centuries-old struggle between science and faith was set aside in the face of new research and discoveries. The First Galactic War (also called World War by some historians) lasted for more than four hundred years. Its end, and the beginning of mankind's second interstellar era, started with the peace treaty of 1077. The Second War ensued, and ended in 1086. Human civilisation continued to thrive on innumerable stars, and the number of sovereign planets rose to thousands. The first decade of the 21st century was marked by another global cataclysm, the battle of 1095, which started the decline of the First Galactic Empire. The three leading nations formed the Galactic Federation of Free Nations, with their capital in the largest, richest and most technologically advanced continent. Seizing the opportunity, the Third Stellar War began with a declaration of independence in 1095, ending in 1120. More nations were included in the galaxy, and were given the chance to create their own star
