"Oh, and unlike their new favorite President, @BarackObama, I used the White House (paid for by US taxpayers) for my campaign!" Trump tweeted. "Check out what he submitted for credentials!" Oh, and unlike their new favorite President, @BarackObama, I used the White House (paid for by US taxpayers) for my campaign! Check out what he submitted for credentials! @FoxNews — Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) June 30, 2017 Trump claimed during the 2016 campaign that he lost the popular vote to Clinton, though experts say the outcome was close enough that it was within the bounds of statistical error. Trump bragged during the final week of the campaign that he would have won the popular vote if not for "millions and millions" of fraudulent votes in California, New Jersey and other states Clinton won. Trump didn't offer evidence for his claims. When Trump won the Electoral College in November, he said he won by a large margin and again suggested California and New Jersey simply rigged the results for Clinton. Trump repeated this on Friday, claiming Obama's 2012 credentials "were not good enough." A senior Trump transition official told The Daily Caller, meanwhile, that Obama turned in his White House credentials five days after winning the presidential election in 2012 and the package had been "expired and ready for pick-up." No White House package is ever "expired," the official said, and they are sent by the president-elect. "It◆
