mutagenesis of the subunit of human factor V: cloning, expression and purification of a stable His-tagged mini-protein.
Site-directed mutagenesis of human procoagulant factor V to a human His-tagged mini-protein was performed. The mini-protein contains residues found in factor V from positions 56 to 588, and residues from Lys600 to His685 were replaced with 15 amino acids in which the N-terminal and C-terminal residues were conserved between human factor V and the mini-protein. The mini-protein was cloned into a pQE-30 expression vector, expressed in Escherichia coli and purified to homogeneity using a novel two-step protocol. Eight mutants were expressed and purified and their thrombogenic properties investigated. Four mutants were chosen for further investigation. The results show that the introduction of the His-tag into factor V had no significant effect on its thrombogenic properties. Culture of porcine neonatal lung cells: A useful tool in determining the mechanism of AMPA toxicity. The postnatal period represents a critical stage in neuronal development and excitotoxicity is a known phenomenon during this period.

We thus hypothesized that exposure of neonatal porcine neurons to Glutamate receptor antagonists (AMPA-KAR) during the postnatal period could alter neuronal apoptosis/survival patterns, and thus evaluate the feasibility of using neonatal porcine lung cells as a useful tool in investigating the mechanisms of AMPA toxicity.

likely to die says WHO The Sierra Leonean president is speaking to the nation. On Thursday, Sierra Leone's president Ernest Bai Koroma spoke to the nation from the midst of a deadly Ebola outbreak that has killed 148 people and affected many more.
Ebola has spread from the western, Liberian regions where the outbreak began to reach other Sierra Leone neighborhoods. "This is the worst outbreak of the Ebola virus since the discovery of the virus," Koroma said. "The full force of government, with the leadership and support of the people of Sierra Leone, is mobilized to get to the bottom of this epidemic.”

As of last week, health officials confirmed 138 cases in Sierra Leone and 24 in Liberia — 13 in Sierra Leone and 11 in Liberia.

Koroma also announced that there are now “more than 200 confirmed and suspected Ebola cases in more than a dozen districts in the affected western counties of Sierra Leone.” Sierra Leone is ranked by the United Nations as the third most corrupt country in the world. Koroma is not the first president to come under fire for those failings, as the Associated Press noted. Sierra Leone was already “known to be poorly governed, plagued by corruption, and a hotbed for rebel and extremist movements,” as the Associated Press reported. As The Guardian reported, the Ebola epidemic “opened up an unfavourable window into the African state” and “some commentators have questioned the sincerity with which Sierra Leone's
