Progestin treatment in polycystic ovary syndrome in relation to weight gain and change in insulin resistance. The aims of the study were to investigate weight gain after oral progestin administration and the change in insulin resistance, in women with polycystic ovary syndrome (PCOS) and normal weight or obesity. Twenty-nine women with a diagnosis of PCOS and 24 normal weight or obese women were enrolled in the study. All women underwent the insulin sensitivity index (ISI) following a hyperinsulinemic euglycemic clamp with and without progesterone treatment. The change in ISI with progesterone treatment was significantly less in women with PCOS than in normal weight or obese women. Body mass index (BMI) was significantly correlated with the change in ISI with progesterone treatment in women with PCOS. The results of the study demonstrated a significant improvement in insulin sensitivity and a positive correlation with body weight for women with PCOS. The decreases in insulin sensitivity were significantly more pronounced in women with PCOS than in normal weight or obese women.[Protection of the rat testis from injury caused by ultrasound]. The present research were to study the protective effect of Chinese traditional medicine Cangzhu Houttu (Chaste tree flower-infloried) against ultrasound injury of rat testis, and to explore its action mechanism. A total of 60 healthy and 28 naturally-pregnant Wistar rats were randomly divided into control group, model group, treatment I group, and treatment II group. Rats were treated for 5 days. In the model group, ultrasound treatment of 12.5 W/cm2 (750 mW) was conducted to the scrotal regions of the rats for 8 min. In the treatment I group, rats were treated by 3 g/kg of Cangzhu Houttu. In the treatment II group, Chinese traditional medicine was used as 10 mL/kg of emulsion at rats for 5 days. The testicular tissues were taken for hematoxylin-eosin staining and electron microscope observation. The ultrastructures and proportions of Leydig cells, germ cells, and Sertoli cells were observed. The local MDA and SOD levels were measured, and changes in the SOD and GSH-PX levels were analyzed. Compared with the model group, testis ultrastructure was undamaged, the number of Leydig cells was decreased, and the proportion of the seminiferous tub

Relationship between coping and self-concept among university students. The main aim of this study is to investigate the relationship between coping strategies, self-concept and academic performance among university students. Second, the study focuses on self-concept that mediates the relationship between coping and academic performance. Participants of this study are college students in the university of Al-Baqa'a, Jordan. They filled out a self-concept instrument and the Brief Coping Orientation to Problems Experienced Scale (Brief COPE). Results show that the coping strategies "Self-distraction" and "Venting" were negatively correlated with self-concept. The strategy of "Self-distraction" is positively related to poor academic performance, while the strategy of "Venting" is negatively related to poor academic performance. The strategy of "Distraction" has a significant mediating effect on the relationship between self-concept and academic performance. The study concluded that students with poor self-concept have various coping strategies that conflict with academic performance; they should be taught coping strategies by means of a psycho-educational program.1.
