GHC 2012 clave Full 554 Å: Fida hindi dubbed 720p..Q: What is the purpose of the "solving" tag? I think there are quite a few questions with that tag, but I do not understand their purpose. Usually, I think such questions are too broad (there are many ways to do it), or not interesting for the focus of Physics.SE (because the initial problem is actually to be solved). Should I delete such questions, or is there any point in keeping them? A: The tag is used to indicate that a question has been posted as an exercise to be solved rather than a practice problem where the answer is known (e.g., what the form of the potential for a harmonic oscillator is, or how to find the total energy of a system in the presence of a central potential). An example of the former: What is the physical origin of the EM repulsion? An example of the latter: How would I solve the problem of finding the total energy of a system in the presence of a central potential? A: I agree that all of these questions (or, at least, most of them) are on topic and I don't see a reason to close/delete them. My personal opinion is that these types of question should be tagged asking for "solutions". Questions tagged "solving" should be closed. For example

Theoretical study on hot bands of ruthenium(II) complexes with phenoxylidene units. The electronic states and spectral line shifts of a series of phenoxylidene-Ru(II) complexes have been investigated theoretically by time-dependent density functional theory (TD-DFT) calculations. The calculations were performed at the UB3LYP/6-311G level, and the GIAO (generalized-active-space multiple-electron-integrals-via-orthogonalization) method was used to obtain the eigenvalue and eigenvector of the singlet and triplet excited states. Our theoretical study revealed that the energies of the singlet states fall in the range of -1.60 to 0.13 eV, and those of the triplet states are -2.80 to 0.08 eV. The results showed that, for the complexes [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(PF6)₂ (1), [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(NH3)₂ (2), and [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(H2PO3) (3), the B3LYP functional gave better results than UB3LYP, and the mean deviation between these two functionals was 0.05 eV. The peak positions of complexes 1, 2, and 3 were red-shifted as compared to [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(PF6)₂ (4), [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(NH3)₂ (5), and [Ru(Phox(-))]₂(H2PO3) (6) by 0.61, 0.60, and 0.29 eV, respectively. The time-dependent wave function analysis revealed that both the absorption and emission arise from the metal-to-ligand charge-transfer transition, Ru(II)-Phox(d0c515b9f4
